- User's Goal: Identify a historical figure (likely a monarch/ruler) who meets all of the following explicit criteria:

1. Had blue eyes.
2. Was a teetotaler (never consumed alcohol).
3. Married after moving to a country that was different from the one of their birth.
4. Lost a child.
5. Wrote a public letter asking people to bring flowers to the child's resting place.

The answer must provide the person's name and the title they held upon accession to rulership.

- Search Efforts to Date:

Multiple keyword combinations were tried (e.g., "blue eyes teetotal queen," "queen lost child letter flowers," "monarch moved country married," etc.). The results repeatedly returned unrelated modern items (Etsy, Amazon), generic funeral-flower guides, or references to well-known monarchs such as Queen Elizabeth II and Queen Victoria, none of which satisfy the full set of conditions.

- Findings on Candidate Figures:

- Queen Victoria – Known to have blue eyes (though not explicitly confirmed in the sources retrieved) and to have lost a child (Prince Leopold). However, she was not a teetotaler (sources note she drank whisky and other alcoholic beverages) and no public letter requesting flowers for a child's grave has been found.
- Queen Elizabeth II – No evidence in the examined sources that she had blue eyes, was a teetotaler, married after relocating, lost a child, or issued such a flower-request letter.
- Other monarchs (e.g., Prince Albert, Emperor Franz Joseph, Empress Elisabeth, etc.) were considered but none matched all five criteria based on the information gathered so far.

- Distinctive Element Still Unlocated:

The most unique and critical component—the public letter asking people to place flowers on a child's grave — has not been identified for any ruler who also has blue eyes, is a teetotaler, married after moving abroad, and experienced child loss.

- Remaining Information Gaps:

1. A definitive historical source confirming a blue-eyed, teetotal ruler who married after emigrating.
2. Documentary evidence of the ruler's child's death and the ruler's personal grief.
3. The text or citation of a public letter in which the ruler requests flowers be brought to the child's burial site.
4. The exact title held upon accession (e.g., Queen, Empress, King, etc.) once the individual is identified.

- Current Status:

Despite extensive searching, no figure satisfying every condition has been conclusively identified. The answer (name and accession title) remains undetermined pending discovery of a source that explicitly ties together all five attributes, especially the letter requesting flowers for a child's resting place.
